How To Use Lightbox

What is a lightbox?

Lightboxes are used to group files together (photo albums), you can create as many as you want, and you can add to them over time.

Why use a lightbox?

Lightboxes are basically your way creating a gallery/photo album, this is really useful if say you really like tigers: you can create a ‘tiger-lightbox’, and fill it with all your favourite tiger images from the Wildscreen Exchange library.

You can have as many lightboxes as you want, so perhaps you could create another one with your favourite macro shots! And using the built-in e-mail function you can share this lightbox with a colleague, who can view it, and if they're registered they can even download it.

You can add files to a current (active) lightbox with the buttons that appear underneath the thumbnails on search and gallery pages, meaning you are able to short list your favourite images quicker, before creating your final order.

Your lightbox can be stored and built upon over time, so if you see an image you like for an upcoming project, you can save it in a lightbox for quick and easy access later on, like a bookmark.
